

Excerpt from A History of Rutland: Worcester County, Massachusetts, From Its Earliest Settlement, With a Biography of Its First Settlers Believing it to be the indispensable duty of every son and daughter of Adam to be active and useful in the sphere Providence has placed them, I have, being by sickness partially deprived of the use of my limbs, for my own amusement and information, and that my last days might not be wholly useless, spared no reasonable exertions to acquire a knowledge of the first settlers and settlement of Rutland. Although not born within its limits, yet, having the day after my birth received the seal of baptism in its first meeting-house, and having lived upwards of seventy years at my present residence, I feel interested in its welfare and prosperity, especially in its children and youth.
