Given this historical context, it is no surprise that when social psychologists became interested in helping behavior in the late s, they were not trying to. Altruism is distinguished from helping behavior. Altruism refers to prosocial behaviors that are carried out without expectation of obtaining external reward (concrete reward or social reward) or internal reward (self-reward). Perspectives on helping - Kin selection theory - Reciprocal altruism - Implications. This chapter provides an overview of motivational, cognitive, and situational factors that influence helping behavior and altruism. The emotional experience of .

The present experiment investigated whether empathic concern produces an egoistic motivation to reduce one's own distress or an altruistic motivation to.

Prosocial behavior is any action intended to help others. One motivation for prosocial behavior is altruism, or the desire to help others with no expectation of. Altruism and helping behavior. C.D.
