

Soon to be every girls best friend
Preface: For all of you gals who thought to yourself "What is this? What happened? What did I do? Well, relax. It's not your fault. You'll soon get through it. Don't worry. It's a phase. This was written for every woman needing to know that everyone goes through the exact same things. From love, to loss, to acceptance, A Phase was written from everyday perspectives, shared experiences and insights not necessarily from a psyche textbook, but from the broken and mended hearts of many. A Phase will help you through each of your experiences, each of your feelings and each one of your phases. And hopefully, will show you that with each phase, there's a certain amount of wisdom you attain. Sometimes not wanting to know, but needless to say, it's better to come away from something or someone thinking you've learned, rather than knowing you could commit a violent crime against that man you once thought of as your "Prince Charming". Yes, you too will get through it. Remember, it's a phase.

Book Excerpts:
I. Ain't love grand!
The music sounds, surrounding me, hoping for, destiny. Will he hear, how can he not, this love I feel, cannot be fought. Passion ignites, we're united, love is true, why should we fight it. (Caution: While you read the explorations of love and its many possibilities, you'll come across more than a few relevant warnings. For the road to bliss is often paved with bumps and potholes. This is not to discourage the reader or rather woman in love not to drive toward her destination, but to encourage her to merely heed the friendly warning signs and be aware of the road ahead and where it may lead. So often we double check our blind spots while driving, but we forget about those we carry with us while falling in love. And that's when we're most likely to need roadside assistance. I hope this book serves as such.)
So you think you found love!
Mr. Right Now has just been dubbed Mr. Right. And why not? You're at a party with some of your girlfriends and you're strolling along the path, or what's been referred to as doing a lap before committing to location, and you see him. This mere mortal that has now been transformed, with the help of our superimposed vision we're so often blinded with, to "Greek God." Hopeless as we are, you, Aphrodite, see this "man of the hour" and hope to extend it to a lifetime. (We are forever planning our future.)
Across the not-so-crowded room, your eyes lock. You give that subtle smile, showing him that you're interested, but not desperate. Letting him know that you're available, yet choosy. But you do want him to know that he could possibly have a chance with you if he could just pick up on one of the many signals you're throwing his way. (Though remember ladies, dogs are smarter. Fetch boy, fetch.)
If you're still in the Aint Love Grand Phase, wonderful! If you're finding yourself saying, Or Is It, step this way....
II. Or is it
So things are going along great. You see no danger signs up the road. Yet, suddenly the car is in a tailspin and you're going downhill with no sign of leveling off nearby. Where was the stop sign or even a yield for that matter? WHAT? Detour to Hell sign!
AHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH! Where did it go?
You've come a long way baby, from those happy-go-lucky "couple" days that is. You can't even remember when the last time you two laughed, smiled at each other or even hugged. Your passionate kisses and embraces when meeting each other at the door have suddenly gone from Harlequin-like to "Oh look,
