

Zahla Simmons and her mom, Veronica, never learned to cope after losing their father and husband during Hurricane Katrina. Veronica turned to alcohol and Zahla struggles with an eating disorder and bouts of depression that have twice led to suicide attempts. If it weren't for her close-knit band of friends, she probably wouldn't have made it through either one. Her happiness and her pain both live in memories of better days when she still had her dad. She just can't seem to envision a future worth striving for. Finlay Shaw risked everything for Annabel, the woman that he loved. He saved her life, but lost his in the process. Finlay was brought back by his father's business partner who is also a vampire. Two hundred years later, Finlay is haunted by his past and clinging to the only constant in his life—protecting Annabel's descendants. He doesn't have the strength to love again, but finds comfort in being the unknown protector of her family. Dominic Hawkins has spent his life tracking Finlay's movements. He inherited the memories of Finlay's life from his father as they have been passed down for generations. Dominic is always on the outside looking in at the life that would be his if Finlay wasn't immortal. Zahla, Finlay, and Dominic's lives collide on the Mississippi Gulf Coast where they all have to learn what they want out of life. They have to stop looking to the past and start looking to the future. Happiness cannot be found in nostalgia for yesteryear.
