

With the expansion of the more powerful Italian city-states, which was to lead to the emergence of a small number of regional states, it was the fate of many smaller cities to fall under the rule of their neighbours, some temporarily, but many permanently. one example of the temporary loss of self-rule is the Tuscan commune of Lucca, which in 1342 fell to its neighbour and long-term enemy, Pisa. Pisan rule lasted for over twenty-five years, until Lucca finally regained its independence in 1379 (from the Introduction, p. 1). This book chronicles the domination of Lucca by Pisa from various angles, including Administration, Finance, and External Relations.
